found) with multiple routers So in my application I have 3 different routers, each of which has a 404 page. I have /routes/404.js, which has the following: router.get('/', function (req, res) { res.send('404'); }); And in my routes/index.js, I have: var express = require('express'); var router = express.Router(); var app = express(); app.use('/:id', router); router.get('/invalid-url', function (req, res) { app.use('/', router); module.exports = app; As you can see, I have one router, which has a get function. The question is, is there any way to not route a 404 with this router, but route it with a different router? I'm aware that, when using express, you can create multiple routers and choose which one will handle what you want (in this case, handling 404's and 404.js). The problem with that is, I'd have to specify it in the.get() function, which I don't want to do.
Any advice is appreciated. A: No, you cannot do that. Express will always use a handler for a certain path, even if there is a handler that is more specific. The way you do it is to use a router with a catch-all. You will have to put that as the only route in your router. router.get('*',

... ... Chapter 10. - What is it? I looked around in bewilderment. - That I don't know. Ren shrugged his shoulders in disbelief. But this is definitely not my house. - I think so too. - I confirmed, looking at the huge room. In the center of it stood a huge table filled with a variety of dishes. There were twelve chairs around the table. A huge carpet was spread on the floor, from fffad4f19a
