oh? did you upgrade? thanks btw np I've always liked how the terminal commands are spaced so nicely in the terminal lordcirth, the commands and the output can be up to 1/4 the width of the terminal itself But it's not always clear what's going on when there's no useful output if it's scrollable, the output can be horizontal in most tmux sessions dougl6k, yeah I suppose I'm used to screen that's kinda the default though, tmux is a new thing it's like split terminals without the output Exactly But even in screen it's easy to not have the output go to the right yes tmux should set the framebuffer to be 256x80 or 256x100, dunno if it already does that in my case, since I split using 4 splits of 80x20 each and have only two panes, that works fine each pane can be up to 80 lines or so and I can scroll it That would be quite useful I believe it's a configurable option the framebuffer is fixed though, so it's always in a consistent position dougl6k, I mean to maximize the vertical column It's not always necessary to have it scroll, but it's nice to have it be resizable that's the purpose of having tmux to have multiple splits of your screen for example I have two splits, one split has a terminal up to the size of the screen, and the other split is 1/4 the size, that is my screen, but it's the size of the tmux terminal, with scrollbar
