We have explored the possibility that this difference is caused by a deficit in the ability to maintain mental representations in the absence of cross-sensory feedback. This hypothesis is based on previous findings showing that in the absence of the targeted sensory modality, listeners are unable to attribute their own words to different speakers. This study is not the first to suggest that in crossmodal scenarios, this deficit might not be limited to language processing. For example, [B19] showed that in the absence of visual feedback, listeners show a deficit when performing audio-visual matching tasks of face and word representations. [B30] also showed that when asked to judge the gender of a series of faces, participants show reduced performance in a second task that involves providing gender-specific descriptions of the faces. As in the case of [B38], these results suggest that crossmodal representations are not part of a more general system for integrating information across modalities. [B40] showed that in the absence of auditory feedback, participants are unable to maintain a representation of the order in which they hear the items of a sequence. This is an intriguing finding that is difficult to reconcile with the findings from [B38]. Nevertheless, the studies performed so far all suggest that maintaining representations in the absence of a sensory feedback is difficult and may lead to reduced representations of the items, as compared to the intact counterparts. The current results provide additional evidence that cross-modal representations can be maintained in the absence of a sensory feedback, but might differ from the representations that listeners would use in the presence of a corresponding sensory feedback. With regard to different types of errors, as already mentioned, we found that the pattern of errors resembles that found when directly comparing the accuracy of non-informative vibrotactile and auditory stimuli. More specifically, a ratio of approximately 2:1 is observed between errors in which the incorrect signal is from the same

Christmas in my house is a small one. My husband decorates a tree, but I like to wait until the last minute to put lights on the tree and until the presents have been opened. If there is a Christmas Eve party, I'm just going to stay in bed. That being said, I have some favorite Christmas movies. Actually, I've collected them since I was a little girl. I loved them so much that my daughter-in-law said she had to hide them from the boys. Why?

Because I'd put on every Christmas movie before Christmas dinner. But I want to share some of my favorites with you. I start with a holiday movie that does not have Santa Claus, like a different kind of Christmas movie. This is one of my favorite Halloween movies and it's the same one I thought of for my Halloween story. It's about how Mrs. Claus is so busy with all the little elves that she forgets to save up enough cash to have her own husband for Christmas. This is such a sweet story that it makes you feel like you're sitting under a big yummy

Christmas tree with a cup of hot cocoa. This is another favorite of mine. The story is about 3 little girls who couldn't get presents for Christmas. So they set out to get things for themselves. I don't usually watch holiday movies that are about Christmas, but this one was so simple and cute, I couldn't help it. I just love it. It's about a little girl who couldn't have a baby sister. She asks her sister for a baby doll that
