Description: For years, Microsoft Office users have depended on Microsoft's AutoCorrect feature for quick spelling fixes and other linguistic acrobatics. Yet there's an alternative. AutoText is a free add-in that complements the built-in Office spell-checker by offering expanded correction options and contextual replacements. With AutoText, you can not only correct typos but also correct capitalization and word wrapping mistakes. And if you want to capitalize something that has already been AutoCorrected, just select the word and choose from a list of similar options. AutoText's contextual replacement options are another major highlight. Once you've done a little research, you'll notice that "a cup of tea" is far more common than "a cup of tea." That's where AutoText comes in. The add-in can automatically correct spelling and capitalization errors from any Word document. In addition, you can create and share custom lists of frequently used replacements. AutoText's other features include the ability to abbreviate words, generate random text, and convert text into emoticons. Description: Cyc is a new digital encyclopedia, a knowledge base, and an information retrieval application. It has been developed by the University of Michigan to help people organize and search information. The program can search on many topics and gives relevant information and links in various formats such as PDF, XML and HTML. It includes more than 50,000 articles from Oxford, Encyclopedia Britannica and the Internet. In addition, the program also includes some multimedia content. Cyc uses a search engine to retrieve articles from both the Internet and the Oxford encyclopedia. This ensures that it has an updated set of articles. The purpose of Cyc is to help people find information. The different formats in which information is stored are beneficial because they make it easier to search. When you start up the program, a small screen will ask you to set the scope of search. You can make searches according to any combination of disciplines, categories, authors and keywords. Another neat feature is that the program also allows you to search for articles by clicking a hyperlink on any page. Other great features of Cyc include: · Auto-typing feature for articles when you are at the main screen. · InfoBox feature that displays links for any website. · Listing of the articles that you have found, so you can quickly view them. · Checking whether an article is available online or not. · It also has a great list of top articles and lists of related articles. · Lists of new articles and categories of interest. · Allows you to search books online. · Saves selected articles and information for offline reading. · Allows you to save the topic of an article for future searches. · Allows you to keep the notes of information stored on the pages. · Searching capability in files. · Comes with a help guide. · You can save your favorite pages, as well as share them on your social media accounts. · Allows you to download the articles and info by email or post it on social media accounts. · Comes with multiple display options and screen layouts, so that you can customize the information you want to display. · There is also an option for you to share information through the email, Facebook or twitter. · It has a bookmark feature and you can use it to store web pages for offline reading. · It comes with
