Category:Culture in Salvador, BahiaResonator mediated microwave thermomechanical behaviors of MoS2 based thin film. In this work, we reported the resonator mediated microwave-to-thermomechanical sensing response of MoS2 based thin film for the first time. We fabricated a flexible microbridge resonator (MMR) which consists of a thin metallic film above the thin film thermomechanical material on the flexible polymeric substrate. A square-shaped MMR with an optimum geometry was used to estimate the real part of the dynamic modulus. From the thermomechanical behavior of MoS2 based thin film, the resonance frequency and the quality factor (Q) were examined at the range of different temperatures. The Q factor of the fabricated MMR thin film structure was found to be approximately 1.6×10^3 at room temperature. The resonance frequency of the MMR was examined through the temperature control, and it was found to decrease until approximately 29 °C, which was further increased to approximately 30 °C. A response of 1.75 MHz/°C was obtained at room temperature, where the value was increased by two-fold when increased by -2 °C. In conclusion, the device response was expected to decrease with the increase in temperature, which may be a potential tool for sensing temperature.
