Q: Running a service on Startup

Question: Is there a way to run a service application on startup? I know a service application is a windows service. Is there a way to get a process of a windows service application running on startup? I have a service that I want to start when the system starts up. I get the service to start on the normal way using the netsh advfirewall add rule name="Service name" dir=in action=allow protocol=TCP localport=portNumber The thing is, I am on a domain. If I start the service on the normal way, it gives the error "Process 'net service' has failed to start because an unhandled exception occurred during the creation of the default host. The following error was encountered while trying to start the particular service:" It is possible that the service has already started and then failed. If I start the service on the normal way, and then run `sc config ServiceName start=demand` it then starts and runs successfully. This doesn't work on a domain.

---

I was wondering if there is any other way to do this.
