Kamala Harris on Sunday called for action on gun violence and addressed the national debate on race and justice after a spate of deadly shootings and racially charged incidents in the wake of the white nationalist rally in Charlottesville, Virginia. "Today's terroristic act in Pittsburgh is another reminder of the urgent need for bold action to keep our communities safe. The massacre in Pittsburgh - a city with a thriving African American community, following a deadly shooting on a synagogue in neighboring Squirrel Hill - should be a wake up call to Congress.

This must be addressed. We need national action to keep our communities safe," Harris tweeted. TRUMP SLAMS 'TROUBLING' CHAOS IN PITTSBURGH AFTER SHOOTING AT POLICE OFFICERS The anti-defamation group says that one of the shooters in Pittsburgh has been named Robert Bowers. The group told Fox News that the man had been "carefully documenting a wide variety of right-wing movements, from Alex Jones to the 'Unite the Right' rally." Both Harris and Sen. Cory

Booker, D-N.J., have come under fire from President Trump and other Republicans for their calls to hold hearings and investigations into the white nationalist rally in Charlottesville last month. On Saturday, Booker called for Attorney General Jeff Sessions to resign. Trump defended Sessions, who is a top adviser to the president. The shooting in Pittsburgh comes less than a week after a white supremacist rammed his car into counterprotesters at a white nationalist rally in Charlottesville, Va., killing one person. The president didn't single out either Harris or Booker in his tweets Sunday morning. But he did call on the country to come
