Changes: Version 2.0.1 - Disable spyware code Version 2.0.0 - Smaller sizeSerial imaging of vascular patterns in the rat aorta using a high-speed imaging system. We examined the formation and patterning of the lumen of the rat aorta. The time of cell proliferation and the time of blood flow were determined in relation to lumen formation and patterning by transplanting rat aorta in a syngeneic host. After 48-h culture, the time of cell proliferation was determined by the use of [3H]-thymidine. The time of blood flow was determined by the accumulation of [125I]-albumin. The border of the blood flow within the wall of the aorta was studied. An optical microscope equipped with a video camera system was used to record the time of blood flow and the time of vascular patterning during aortic lumen formation and patterning in the transplant. We investigated the effects of the timing of cell proliferation and the timing of the establishment of the blood flow on the formation and patterning of the aortic lumen. The time of the establishment of the blood flow in the walls of the aorta was earlier than the time of the formation of the lumen. The border of the blood flow was located in the media of the aorta before the formation of the lumen.Q: what's the deal with static and transient members? What is the difference between a static member and a transient member? A: The difference between static members and transient members is that the static members are shared by all instances of the class, while transient members are instance specific. So, when you use a static member, say, in a class that does not have a constructor, you can access the member in a constructor of any other class.

class Foo { static int x; public Foo() { System.out.println(x); } } class Bar { static void sayHello() { System.out.println("hello"); } } class Test { public static void main(String[] args) { Foo f = new Foo();
