Read more: This article will teach you to create a cylinder using the shapes tool in AutoCAD. The methodology used in this tutorial is the same for all the standard shapes tool such as box, rectangle, circle, ellipse, parabola, and hyperbola, but remember that each shape tool has its own options and capabilities. For example, the box tool allows you to change the size of the box by typing a value in a text box. With the circle tool, you can change the radius of the circle. With the box and circle tools, you can change the number of sides for a polygon. For example, you can turn a rectangle into a polygon by increasing the number of sides in the properties palette. Method 1: Create a cylinder with the cylinder tool The Cylinder shape tool is the only shape tool that provides the option to create a hollow cylinder. The Cylinder shape tool draws a hollow cylinder by filling its internal area with solid line segments. The line segments are not connected to one another and will remain visible until you specify the amount of solid fill you want. The default setting for the amount of solid fill is 100%. To create a hollow cylinder, you must make sure that the Amount of fill box is set to 100% and the End fill box is set to 0%. Select the Cylinder tool by pressing the T key. In the Tools panel on the left side of the screen, select Cylinder, as shown in Figure 1. The Cylinder shape tool is a hollow cylinder that will be used to create a watertight tank. Figure 1. Select the Cylinder shape tool. Point and click anywhere in the drawing area to start creating a cylinder. Figure 2. Draw a point to create a cylinder. The Cylinder shape tool draws a hollow cylinder. A hollow cylinder is simply a cylinder with no internal area. To create a cylinder, you need to fill the internal area with solid lines. The default setting for the Cylinder shape tool allows you to create the shape of a circular cone that is capped at the top with a circle. As you can see in Figure 2, you must first draw a point. As you draw a point, the tool will convert the point into a cylinder, assuming the amount of solid fill is set to 100%. Note: It is possible to create multiple
