Page Content In the fight against climate change, the international community has worked hard to both reduce the harmful effects of greenhouse gases, and promote the development of cleaner, more renewable energy sources. In this context, natural gas has been established as a clean energy source with low environmental impact, attracting governments and markets for its use around the world. As the world's third largest natural gas producer, Australia has a solid track record for the development of natural gas-based power generation. Within the EECA, total annual supply of natural gas to the electricity sector in Australia has increased by more than 100% from 1990 to 2010, and more than 50% in the last 10 years alone. Since 2007, the Australian Government has funded $30 million over three years (2007-2009) in the Clean Energy Plan, and renewable energy development programs to expand natural gas development in Australia, including the Natural Gas Unit at the Queensland node of the Eastern Gas Pipeline, and onshore gas in Queensland. Distribution of natural gas in Australia In Australia, natural gas is distributed to individual households, businesses, regional markets, and major inland cities through a network of around 2,000 natural gas distributors (NGDs). Natural gas is supplied by exploration and production wells located in the onshore part of the country (75%) and offshore (25%), with a capacity of 130 Tcf 3da54e8ca3
