PC Sleeper is a quite simple, but powerful and lightweight application that helps you with system shutdown, restart, standby, and log off. On the first sight, you may be wondering what a power manager app is for. Well, this is for your own good - you can stop or suspend your computer anytime you want without any problems. PC Sleeper's functionality is pretty simple and all it does is to not only shut down your machine when the timer expires, but also restart it when you do decide to pick up your machine. You can also set its idle time to put your system to the stand-by state. Another nice feature is that you can also log off your user. It's a very elegant power manager that uses less RAM than previous alternatives. You don't need to run a third-party power manager to do the same things. PC Sleeper only takes 200kb of RAM and you can use it to power manage your system from anywhere. This is a great power management tool to use if you are a heavy user because you can always plug your computer off and it will remain suspended even if you reconnect it. PC Sleeper is a very high-quality application that works flawlessly with any operating system. It provides the user with the option to create personalized schedules and it also offers a lot of real time power options, even for users that are not so experienced on the subject. PC Sleeper is a very convenient and easy-to-use application. One of its best features is that it provides an extensive list of power management options that include: Shut down: It's the easiest one; when the count down timer expires, the system will shutdown automatically. Standby: Put your computer to standby state when you want it to be off. You can set the idle time to time that you want the computer to stay idle for. Log off: Log off your user at any moment from anywhere in the world. In the above article I'll go over the whole complex topic about the use of application logging in different situations. I'll also talk a bit about the "why", "what" and "how to" in the application logging field and I'll create scenarios where you should use the logging facilities and not log manually. The most common scenarios where you should use logging are: Application crashes. Timeouts and long-running requests. Uncontrolled events in system and/or application code.
