

Archive for the 'Nose' Category I'm not sure I've ever seen a drip-free nose as big as the size of the nose on this face. I wonder how hard it is to breathe in there? This face has the top of it hidden by the hair on this picture, but it is really massive. I was looking into the details of this face and just noticed something. The nose is so large because the tip of the nose reaches almost to the cheek. I wondered, so I did some research. I found that it is called a "submarine nose" and in some cultures this is considered a sign of beauty. It is also called a “submarine aristocrat” nose and is also present in some coastal cultures.

Q: Twitter 'SignInWithPopup' issue when clicking on signup-button

When I visit a newly created account on my site via a signup-button, the signup is being done and the user is being signed in. This is all good, but when the user clicks on the 'SignUp' button again he is redirected to the Twitter page and then the signin dialog reappears. Are there any (domain) whitelisted Twitter applications that I can use? The website is www.skalab.be.

A: I had the same issue and spent half an afternoon looking for the answer. This is a common Twitter oAuth issue which was supposed to be fixed back in 2012 with the There is currently still no fix for this issue. Only way to fix it is to disable pop ups or use separate button (like in the example of Twitter) A: This is a well know issue, that Twitter is committed to fix. The workaround used by Twitter is linked in their answer to the issue, and

var formElem = document.getElementById("facebook-login-form"); formElem.addEventListener("click", function(event) { event.preventDefault(); login("twitter");

Pharmacology of actions of cocaine on neuronal and astroglial cells in brain slice. The interactions between neuronal and astroglial cells in brain slice cultures were investigated in a pharmacological study on the actions of cocaine (10^{-3} M), which was applied locally on the slice surface or on the slices superfused with the drug for periods up to 10 h. The latter, in general, caused the most pronounced effect. The application of cocaine directly to slices induced a slow rise in the extracellular potassium level and affected the GABA-induced currents; in the presence of dopamine, the sensitivity of cells to this agent increased. Cocaine changed intracellular free calcium levels in the astroglia, and this effect was enhanced in slices preincubated with dopamine. The author concluded that cocaine acts on the neuronal and astroglial cells at the same time, affects transmitter release from the neurons, and modulates their interaction.
