The noise got closer and then I heard the sound of a motor coming to life. As I got closer I noticed a red and white station wagon pulling onto the road. It was heading north, toward the mountain. When the red and white station wagon passed my house, the door to the back seat opened up and a tall, thin, and bald young man got out. He was holding his head in his hands and then he spotted me. His demeanor changed and he immediately started trying to explain. Joe and I turned to watch him for a minute. He eventually got into his car and tried to explain that he was new in town and that he had a bad headache. I offered to take him to the emergency room, but he declined. This week I learned that he was, in fact, new in town, just like I had assumed. He had just moved from Florida. He was there for a wedding. His parents lived in Florida. His brother and sister lived in California. He and his fiancée were going to stay with his mother for the winter while he worked and saved up money for a down payment on a house. There was one problem. He did not have a credit card. He did not know anyone in town. He had no work clothes. And he needed transportation to work. I have all sorts
