Washington, DC - The White House on Tuesday released a statement of support for victims of the March 20 bombings that killed at least 106 people and wounded hundreds more across the country. In the statement, President Donald Trump expressed his "deepest sympathies" to the people of Pakistan and said he is "greatly saddened by this horrific attack." "The United States condemns the terrorist attacks that have targeted two of Pakistan's finest and greatest institutions: a hospital and a school," Trump said. "The attacks on the services and facilities that the people of Pakistan depend on to provide health, education, and humanitarian aid to the families of those fighting terrorism are reprehensible and cannot be tolerated." Pakistan government spokesperson read the statement from the White House podium on Tuesday. The statement came as Pakistani officials received the bodies of 22 of the people killed in the attack in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, according to The Associated Press. More than 200 people were wounded by the suspected suicide bombing at Bacha Khan University in Charsadda, just outside of Islamabad, Pakistan's capital. Officials in Charsadda have alleged that the bombing was carried out by a Taliban faction known as Jamaat ul Ahrar. The dead included eight people from a medical faculty in Charsadda and more than 20 professors and students from Bacha Khan University
