There are two columns in the table which store the ID of the parent and the child. As an example: parentID childID ---------- ---------- 1 1 1 2 2 1 2 3 3 1 3 4 4 1 4 2 I need to return the parents and children that are at least 3 levels up from the root. So in this case it would be 1 (because it has no parents) and 4. Can anyone help me with the query please? I'm getting lost in how to build up the logic in it. A: This will find all the ancestors: select distinct parentId from Table where parentId = 1 Here's a full example. Here's the same query with a join: select distinct t1.parentId from Table t1 inner join (select parentId from Table where parentId = 1) t2 on t1.parentId = t2.parentId Q: Arbitrarily large number of zeros in sequence I've written an R function that generates a sequence of negative numbers whose terms are obtained by adding a fixed positive integer to the previous term

If one what plant manager is it for a train track the substrate is not the same, the track does not fall into one or a group of segments either. Do you have to do anything special for it? Click to expand... I could not answer you, but im sure someone else will. You can build whatever you want, it takes work. Heres an example of how a group of segments could be created. Just be careful not to cut 3 path crossings in a row or it will be considered the same segment.Event Details Career talk with emphasis on finding new career opportunities in the current economy.
