Q: Choosing a Repository pattern for Sqlite Database and MVC3 I am currently using the Repository pattern in a MVC3 project to access my database and it works great. For the most part I am only using LINQ. My model is a simple entity class that I am using to bind to my tables in the DB. So is there a better way to access the DB, rather than using the Repository pattern? More specifically I am looking for a way to abstract the database access using a ORM like dapper and not have to write the sql or query every time. Other than a ORM, what would the best way to do this be? A: I was about to suggest the EF. But did not want to kill your birds with stones without asking first. So I would advise that you to look at the EntityFramework: Code First. What does it offer 1cdb36666d

Dose distributions in the normal breast have been investigated for a range of treatment techniques. The purpose of the present study was to investigate dose distributions in the liver in patients undergoing radiotherapy to the breast using Monte Carlo simulations and a female adult phantom. Monte Carlo simulations were performed to obtain dose distributions in the phantom. The parameters of a representative patient, namely, body mass index, height, body surface area, and mean liver density, were obtained from the literature. Four different radiotherapy techniques were investigated: (1) tangential fields with wedge factors of 2, 4, and 6%; (2) a static electron beam with an energy of 6 MV; (3) a dynamic electron beam with an energy of 6 MV and a field size of 60x60 cm; and (4) a static photon beam with a field size of 60x60 cm. Radiotherapy treatment planning systems were used to determine dose distributions in the phantom. Differences between predicted and measured dose distributions were observed in the directions parallel and perpendicular to the skin surface. Predicted doses were uniformly overestimated in the phantom. The relative differences between predicted and measured dose values were greatest in regions away from the external body surface. These differences have been attributed to an overestimation of dose and patient scatter as the field size is increased. The results of the present study indicate that dose distributions in patients undergoing radiotherapy of the breast using a female adult phantom are not representative of dose distributions in the liver. Therefore, a human liver phantom should be used for accurate dose calculations in patients undergoing radiotherapy of the breast. Chiropractic relieves back pain for patients A study by the University of Maryland backs up chiropractors' claims that spine manipulation helps patients with back pain. Researchers
