"This is a fantastic step forward in playing ball physics in FIFA," said FIFA Lead Narrative Designer Jacob Sanne. "It completely transforms the player experience and pushes AI to its limit. Our teams are using these new technologies to create in-game animations that recreate the twists, turns and explosive collisions that players make every day. We're also using the data from this process to create highly believable player movements, animations, and player traits," he added. Having used HyperMotion Technology, the Creative Assembly Creative Director and Executive Producer Dan O'Brien has a clearer idea of how the player will react to the animations on the pitch in-game. "Our players aren't as wide in the hips or as agile as they are in reality, so it's important to get the moves correct," he added. "If they don't, it ends up with players running in the wrong direction or coming out of the wrong angle when they shoot, which creates all kinds of problems. We used to have to create hundreds of animations for each player - we're not doing that anymore." The new feature also lets the Creative Assembly team run pre-production playtests on Windows, with the player in motion and reacting realistically to how they'd react in the game environment. The team has run full-scale plays using player movement data to capture key moments, like a player moving into a tackle to score a goal. "We're using that in the game to perfect the moment and get the animations right," added O'Brien. The data-capture process used by the AI in FIFA 21 has been retained in FIFA 22. The Creative Assembly, noting that there are challenges in making the network play experience realistic, is focussed on preserving the AI capability to make decisions at every moment during a game. The artificial intelligence system makes use of "Context Coherence", which helps make sure every decision a player makes is consistent with the overall state of the game. That's a difficult challenge when you have an AI making a million decisions every second. "You see in FIFA 21 how the players create beautiful runs, and they do it through hundreds of animations," said O'Brien. "That's very easy to do when you're not using real players. We make a lot of runs

Fifa 22 Features Key:

- NEW: "HyperMotion Technology": Move in real-world player animation and react naturally to all in-game behaviours.
- Real players' actual skills matter, no embellishment, with a new ball physics engine, improved player animations, smarter AI and new physics-based systems.
- FUT CHAMPIONS - Tier 1 and 2 squads. Core 40+ players will act and look like their real world peers.
- GOALIE LOCKS - Steal a goal within dribbling distance and a goalkeeper lock works to freeze the goalkeeper and allow you to work the ball past him.
- Master your defenders - new challenge specific AI and tactics mode let you form teams around your preferred play styles, more skills, and more control over all players on the pitch
- Loading scrum - ready to step in and score - now you can break through the defence with an aerial strike in one-on-one situations, when there is space, or when the keeper dives at a high cross.
- TEAM INTELLIGENCE - All hands on deck - when there is a chance to unleash a man from behind the ball or when your maverick moves a team out of position or ahead of the game, get your full-backs into the attack, and activate tactic cards for it.
- Tactics Editor - use the in-game map to plan your next move - make sure to let your strikers know that a high cross may be coming your way and mark where to start a counterattack.

FIFA® 20 features a deeper, more intelligent game engine, which delivers the highest levels of ball physics, ball flight, player intelligence, and more. The game uses the same new game engine already powering EA SPORTS FIFA 18, so we're able to maintain the fast-paced gameplay, intensity, and explosiveness of FIFA 17 with far more realistic visuals than ever before. FIFA 20 also features innovations such as True Player Motion, new AI and Player Cores, Physically Based Shading for the Player Models, and far more. A game like FIFA features teams, stadiums and players, and all of that lives inside of the game. The goal of the FIFA team is to bring a new level of authenticity to the gameplay of FIFA while maintaining the gameplay framework that everyone loves. One of the ways we make sure the game plays close to real life is by building the player models and everything else from scratch, based on the rules of the sport. Building the models for FIFA means putting them through rigorous tests and using a wide variety of real-life data to ensure that we can build the best-possible player models in the game. The levels of player individuality in the game is also directly tied to the quality of the player models we have in the game. So in many ways, the better the models, the better the player in the game. From the players running, jumping, and generally being themselves, to the animations that change based on the position of the player. Players fall, run, fall, defend, jump, receive the ball, pass and more. All of these things happen on a match day from anywhere inside a stadium and represent the real-life statistics and behaviors of players who are going to play on a match day. Another thing we do to make the game as authentic as we can is to use real players as the template for our players. So we take the real world players and build our players from the ground up, right down to the kit they wear and the animations they perform. That way if someone was playing on real field, on real referees, we can ensure that the animations on the player match what he or she does in the real world. So all of these things together ensure that the game feels like a real match in a real stadium. Where to watch the action? Fans can tune in to the FIFA World Cup™ and get to know the teams competing in
