On Tuesday, the school board refused to renew his contract. "I guess, at this point, we just have to trust that the law is fair and equal for all students, regardless of which 'token' is put forth," Ganner said. Bailey's artwork has been distributed in schools throughout the state. He's hoping to open up a campaign, to apply for a Constitutional amendment to prevent what he describes as modern-day segregation. "I'd like to see a day where we have this thing called in-school suspension abolished because it's not at all effective," Bailey said. No one from the school district could be reached for comment Monday, but Bailey's mother says the new superintendent and the school board are "making sure the schools are being nice." "In the beginning, they just wanted to be friends, and have some coffee," said Juanita Bailey. "Maybe they don't see that some kids are being more harmed in the long run." "This is a very deep and hurtful issue," says Bailey's teacher, Heather Christensen. "I do feel that the issue has been taken seriously at this point. At the same time, this is still an ongoing issue. It hasn't been resolved. There is still work to be done." Christensen said many of the students are now being mean to Bailey. "So I think we just have to keep on moving. It doesn't give up. We're going to keep on doing this. It's a good thing that we're talking about it." Schools throughout the state are using the artwork as a teaching tool. A special art project is now being taught at the Houston school district's Bellaire High School.Q: Изменить версию компонента. c# Вот код var list = СУБД1.
