Also, with Adobe's CC suite, Photoshop alone is only the beginning. This suite also includes Illustrator, InDesign, Dreamweaver, and a host of other tools used by design professionals. The following sections illustrate the elements that make up a typical image. Fundamental elements of a Photoshop image In short, an image file's elements are grouped into layers: Text: A text layer holds text, and text can be placed, moved, rotated, mirrored, and deleted. Grayscale/color: A grayscale layer holds grayscale images, and a color layer holds color images. You can combine the grayscale and color layers to create composite images with several unique, separate layers.

Image: A layer can hold transparent images or color images, depending on whether you have turned the image into a layer or just one of the element types of a composite image.

Background: A background layer is typically a duplicate of your entire image that is created as a separate layer and used for overlaying other elements on your image. This means that you can hide or delete the background layer to see your image on its own without a background. When you make a new layer, you may create a new background, but you can also create new layers that do not have a background. Gradient: You can create a gradient with the Gradient tool. You can change the color of the gradient by choosing one of the gradient fills (or modes). You can also vary the color of the gradient by using the HSL or Hue Saturation Lightness options (expanded in Chapter 18). The result looks like an image made out of a series of graduated layers — a kind of a rainbow pattern. Brush: The Brush tool enables you to create a new object by clicking and dragging a cursor over an area in your image. You can adjust the brush size, shape, and hardness. The result looks like a fuzzy brush stroke, and you can change the brush size, color, and so on. You can apply effects to the whole image or to individual layers. You can apply these effects by using the following tools: Adjustment layer: You can create an Adjustment layer to change the tint, contrast, and exposure of an image. You can also enhance and modify the image in other ways by using other adjustment layers.

Brightness/contrast: Brightness and contrast alter the image as a whole and thus are best applied

Q: how to print multiple products details in a mail using magento I was wondering if anyone could help me with this. I'm having issues trying to do a mailer that tells users their order details. I have a form that works through a webpage and then customers are emailed their order details.

However, with this method all I can do is print one order details at a time in the email, and I want to print multiple orders in the email so people know how many products they have and what they are. Here is what I have right now

A: public function __construct()

```
{ $this->_order =

```
Mage::registry('current_order');

```
$this->_order =
```

$this->_order->load(); } See the comments to modify this to your need. Q: How to convert date

format YYYY-MM-

DDTHH:MM:SS + 00:00 to the date format YYYY-MM-DD in JavaScript? From the string

2017-11-09T05:14:15Z the date

is 2017-11-09T05:14:15+00:00

in JavaScript. How to change it to the date format yyyy-mm-dd and get 2017-11-09? I tried to change the string to the date with javascript var date1 = new Date("2017-11-09T05:14:15Z");

date1.toString("yyyy-mm-dd");
console.log(date1); But I failed.
What can I do? Thanks. A: Can't you just format the date to the string using the same function
you are using to convert the date
to a string in the first place? You can use.toISOString() on the date
to get a string in the ISO 8601 format, then put that string in quotes, e.g.: const date1 = new
Date("2017-11-09T05:14:15Z");

Q: javascript what is the meaning of this expression "return typeof(X) === "undefined"? X :?" I'm reading a code which has this strange code snippet(using node.js) return typeof(X) === "undefined"? X : can anyone explain what is the meaning of this A: This is an ES6 conditional expression. It will check whether typeof(X) is undefined or not. If it is undefined then it just returns X, else it will return an expression for the left side of the condition based on the value of the right side of the condition. This code snippet is equivalent to: `if (typeof(X) === "undefined") return X; else return typeof(X) === "undefined"? X : null;` This is because `typeof(undefined) === "undefined"`. The else statement is called the ternary expression. You can find more about it here A: It's an ES6 feature called The Ternary Operator `A: typeof(X) === "undefined"`
