“Motion capture technology helps us to give the players and teams a more authentic and realistic feel in FIFA,” said Oliver Zurowski, Senior Artistic Director for EA SPORTS. “After months of work and analyzing over 22,000 on-field actions to make sure we were capturing and accurately modeling player movement, we’re confident that we have a product that captures the essence of the modern game.” Motion capture technology has been used in other sports games in the past, but because of its dynamic nature and speed, it has never been used in a full game before. The data collected from the players is used as a digital template of the players’ movements. This data then gets used in the game, creating a more life-like, authentic feeling of the ball and player movement. “FIFA is one of the most popular and played sports worldwide, and it is great that we get the opportunity to use this technology in the game,” said Phil Macdonald, Executive Producer at EA SPORTS. “We are thrilled that we’ve been able to put real players inside the game and use their movements and actions to improve the gameplay.” Players can play as three different team members (for example, goalkeeper, defense and striker) to recreate the motion capture data captured on the pitch. Players can then also play in completely new ways they’ve never played before, including the ability to run towards an attacker to perform a quick-hits touch pass, and the player can even be on the ground during a goal. “The way that players move and act on the pitch is so unique and different,” said Bruce Snyder, Executive Creative Director at EA SPORTS. “We wanted to take this ability to play as a player on the pitch, and allow players to go on the ground and show their skills or play the ball in completely new ways.” One of the biggest challenges of making the transition from 22 to the new “HyperMotion” engine was how we were going to capture all the unique on-field movement of the players. Teams played a full-intensity game of football, so we captured in-depth, detailed movements on the pitch. “We spent an enormous amount of time going over the matches and logging every aspect of each player

What's new:

- Hypertufo -- Play your way around the pitch using an easy-to-use forward passing mechanic similar to Google Street View. While playing your weekly TOTS selections in FIFA 17, you were able to see how easily you could apply your moves. With Hypertufo, you'll be able to do that in 2D.
- Matchday -- Using the "Matchday" system, for the first time in the game, you'll be able to play matches where the opposition has the same formation to your own team. You'll then be able to make changes tactically during the match to try and find a way to influence the outcome.
- THE SIMS -- FIFA 17 saw a new challenge system where the better you did, the more challenges you'd unlock that were built for the more skilled player. With the introduction of "Custom Training" and "Matchday Challenges," which are presented in your weekly coach's wishes, you'll be able to actually play to unlock more challenges, proving once again that no challenge is too great or too difficult to solve.
- Player responsibility -- Instead of giving stats to users, EA have gone the route of giving players more responsibility. In FIFA 17, your influence on on-pitch player traits, body type, and your manager's off-pitch actions were limited to maybe checking if your midfielders were happy or not, and either changing your tactics or player traits for that week's match. With FIFA 22, your influence is made greater, and give you more control over what your player does in the game. You'll be able to check their feelings, watch their stats, or check if they're happy at the match end.
- Federation Teampay -- New support for 5 different Federations, including Asia: Japan, China, South Korea, Australia and New Zealand. Each Feds will have their own broadcast play style with famous, former football icons on the pitch.
- Increased overall gameplay speed in the game.
