Topical application of local anesthetic-containing hydrogel attenuates P. acnes-induced pain: a randomized double-blind study. The aim of the study was to investigate the effect of a topical hydrogel, containing both the topical anesthetic lidocaine and the non-narcotic analgesic naloxone on pain in patients with painful chronic facial acne. Forty patients with chronic facial acne pain were randomized to use twice a week a topical hydrogel, containing either lidocaine (lidocaine group) or naloxone (naloxone group) for 20 days. Pain was assessed subjectively by patients using a pain visual analog scale (VAS) and objectively by a laser-induced pain measurement using spectrophotometric analysis of erythema. The lidocaine group reported significantly less VAS scores and erythema than the naloxone group. The lidocaine-containing hydrogel used in this study might be a suitable treatment for reducing the pain of acne patients, especially of patients who have failed to respond to conventional therapy. Further studies are needed to support these data.

Interior finishes are often supplied to customers as separate parts to be installed by the customer. This is often a laborious job, and not often is the finish installed without leaving some sharp edges where it was attached. A finish having a minimum of joints is desirable. In some cases, the side walls of a finish is not flat but may instead have a slight angular shape, with the top and bottom of the wall sections having sharp corners. A trim or product finish is flat on all surfaces. If a product finish is trimmed with a straight edge on the front side, the back side will have a notched appearance. To obviate this, a notched finish is shaped to have the back side wider than the front side. In a standard pre-shaped hinge finish, such as a ship lap, only one end has a finish cut so that the finish may be trimmed with a straight edge for a more uniform appearance.

Q: Is there an equivalent to in Classic ASP? I would like to pass down a boolean type in an url from a remote server, to a script on my page. I'm using classic asp, so I could do something like ...some code here...
