Of course I'm assuming it's a Towson student. Once I wake up I tend to not remember seeing anything. This is where I am shocked that this is the case. I have a great deal of shame about my lack of visual memory, and I'm very very glad that it's not true, because the fear that I wouldn't be able to recognize a student of mine if I saw them would be absolutely terrifying. It's really fun to be the year that your first year of computer engineering students start to focus on computers as a "real" thing. They start to find real jobs in the technology field. I'm really proud of my students for being able to plan out a career in something that is so interesting. This is a lovely post and I'm sure I'll echo most of these thoughts at one point or another. And I'm also absolutely certain that I won't share the brain tumor. :-p Comment numbers are so limited, my brain hurts. And, for some reason, I can't work google into this comment but I'm just going to tell you that I agree with you. You have a lot to
