The original headline states the above but I am unsure how to put that into a format that I can use to upload directly. Would it be more efficient to go straight to my vps server and upload the file? A: you just upload directly to your VPS using Putty. For more information, see A: You can upload directly from your workstation to the remote host. Start a terminal on your workstation and use `scp thefile youreworkstationsystemusername@ip:~/folder` to upload your file there. start a terminal on your server and use `ssh youruser@your-ip-address` to login into the server. In this case the ssh connection will be established and you will be at the $HOME of the user you logged into the server. Just issue the following commands from here, to move the file into the $HOME/Downloads/ folder, the file `youreworkstationsystemusername@ip:~/Downloads/` and `chown username:username /home/username/Downloads/thefile` just remove the username from the command and change the username into yours. For doing this as a service, just add the following snippet of code to `/etc/cron.d/sskuser` script: `@reboot /usr/bin/ssh -C -t -N -p 22 youruser@your-ip-address "/home/youruser/Downloads/yourfilename"` and make sure to update `/etc/hosts` to allow access to remote hosts and your IP.
