Treatment with TNF inhibitors improves clinical measures of disease activity in patients with rheumatoid arthritis (RA). Recent studies suggest that the duration of treatment with TNF inhibitors may influence the clinical response to therapy. We aimed to determine the optimal duration of treatment with etanercept in patients with RA. In this 12-week, multicenter, double-blind study, we enrolled adult patients with RA and an inadequate response to methotrexate who were randomized to receive weekly injections of 50 mg etanercept (n=90) or placebo (n=74) for 12 weeks. The primary endpoint was the proportion of patients who achieved a 70% improvement in the American College of Rheumatology (ACR) criteria for 20% (ACR20) or 50% (ACR50) at 12 weeks. Secondary endpoints included the proportion of patients who achieved an ACR20 at 12, 24, and 52 weeks. In addition, we conducted analyses to identify predictors of the efficacy of etanercept in patients with RA. The primary endpoint was met at 12 weeks in the etanercept group (44% [95% CI 34-54%]) but not in the placebo group (2% [95% CI 0-5%]) (P=0.0001). A total of 43% (14/33) of the patients treated with etanercept who had low disease activity (least-squares mean Disease Activity Score in
