The most impressive stories are the stories of individuals who have overcome significant challenges to achieve victory. It was in this spirit that I set out to write a book. I hope you will find this story inspirational, and that it will help you to believe that there is a bright future ahead for you and your family. I invite you to read the rest of the story and to feel inspired. Monday, November 8, 2011 Smile Nowhere on the face of the earth can I find two more perfect words for describing what I'm trying to say. When you smile for the first time, it takes you where no one can take you again. This is my story. My smile is the last gift I've given to myself for not being there when my mother died. On October 26th, 2000, my father, Michael, called 911 after my mother, Terri, was found in critical condition in the bathroom of their bathtub. She passed away that night, just a few hours after they arrived at the hospital. She was thirty-six years old. Triggered by my father's 911 call, I went to see Terri when she opened her eyes in the ICU, and I cried. She said, "Smile, this is your last sight of me on this earth." This was a thousand people's fault. It was my mother's fault for not talking to me when I was small; it was my dad's fault for being a non-custodial father; it was the nurses' fault for calling me instead of him; it was the doctor's fault for failing to examine my mother properly; it was the doctor's fault for finding nothing wrong with her; it was the ambulance drivers' fault for not having a defibrillator; it was the emergency room doctor's fault for being too busy to take her pulse; it was the doctors' fault for not finding a heartbeat; it was the coroner's fault for never completing his autopsy; and it was my fault for not staying by my mother.
