Using the tools in Photoshop Photoshop comes with a number of tools that enable you to edit an image. It includes the Quick Selection tool, lasso tools, and rectangle selectors. The following list contains a brief introduction to each tool and how to use it: * Quick Selection Tool (Q) : This tool can be used to quickly select an area of an image by first clicking the image with the selection handle. Then you can drag around the image to select the desired area. You can use the area you have selected to delete, add new shapes or edit, or make other edits, as shown in Figure 2-1. Figure 2-1. Often times you may find yourself wanting to select a rectangular area of an image for a specific purpose. Using the Quick Selection Tool (Q) is a great way to quickly select a portion of your image for the specified purpose. * Lasso Tools : Lasso tools are most useful for painting around image edges or to select an object that may be hard to select. The lasso tool can be used in two ways: you can drag to select an area of an image by tracing around the border of that area, or you can select a rectangular area by clicking once to start a lasso, hold the left mouse button, and then drag in the same direction over an area to create a rectangle. Figure 2-2 shows this being done with the lasso tool. Figure 2-2. Use the lasso tool to precisely select a target area in an image. You can use these tools to edit an image or to crop an image. You can create a new layer by clicking the New Layer icon on the Layers panel, pressing Shift+Ctrl+N (Windows) or Command+Shift+N (Mac OS X), or by simply pressing Enter on the keyboard. You can work with the new layer independent of any other layers. When you're finished editing the layer, you can always Merge Down, flatten the layer, or turn on or off the visibility of the layer.

A Thousand Lives I have always wanted to hold a baby, even though I am extremely independent. Most people think that I am childish. I know this because I am told that I am, in everyday situations, childish. But it is so true. I have a great deal of patience. I hold on to whatever I believe in until I have gathered all the information and studied it, I love babies. They are just as wonderful as a puppy would be. I love the way a baby looks at you and looks at you with his or her eyes. They never lie to you. They are a blank slate when you speak to them. You can have a direct conversation with a baby. I just love what I love. I have seen babies make me feel like they do. They make me feel sad, and happy, and uncomfortable. I think it is their innocence. They are so easy to make feel like they are the center of the world. I love music, it brings peace. I love to read. I love art, and feel I have no talent. I enjoy going to museums, and historical places. I enjoy to go for walks. I enjoy interacting with animals, and the outdoors. I love the way a toddler can look at you with eyes that don't appear to mean anything. They are so innocent. It makes you want to give them everything, and protects them. I don't feel that I am a very good mother. I feel like I have a lot to learn. But I want to love all that I love, and live all that I live. I love all of my family and they mean the world to me. I love all of my friends and know that I am very blessed. I love my job. But I hope that in my lifetime, I will be a better mother. I believe that the love you will find in yourself, if you have to look, is the love of a mother. I have a story to tell, that is a story of a thousand lives. Q: How to find the value of the entire array? How can I get the value of the whole array elements? For example: "words"=>["id","de","kw","lsw"] "reflections"=>["id","de","kw","lsw"] How can I get the result "id,de,kw,lsw"? A: My solution here for the purpose of storing them in a separate variable. I could use a Dictionary for this (which is much more compact and convenient). The added benefit is you can sort them in order to display them. `foreach ($words as $i => $word) { $reflections[$i] = $word; } sort($reflections); foreach($reflections as $value) echo $value. ',';` You could also sort the array in the script using `usort sort($words);` Hope it helps! Q: Embedding a template in model class Can someone help me in getting the template class to be a model class and do some logic inside it? According to the definition of the models in django docs and the Django's own documentation of Django models it's possible to create custom models and inherit from Django's model classes and use them, but I would like to know the syntax of doing that. This is the template in question: `{% extends "localhost/lookup.html" %} {% block title %}index{% endblock %} {% block body_id %}{% endblock %}` And, what I would like it to look like: `from lookup import Looking from django.db.models import Model, Q class Lookup(Model): # Rather than defining the fields, inherit from Django's model class title = models.CharField(max_length=255) slug = models.SlugField() def __str__(self): return self.title class Meta: unique_together =`
