Chris Christie (R) on Thursday suggested that federal officials are involved in “fixing a problem” at the local racetrack for the 4th of July fireworks. Christie made the remark during an interview on Fox & Friends in response to a question about whether he believed there was any way to salvage the career of former New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie (R) a week after he resigned as head of the Republican Governors Association (RGA). “I don’t know how you fix it, and maybe it’s not fixable. But I don’t want it on the 4th of July,” Christie said. “I do not want it. We have plenty of ways for people to burn stuff, and I don’t want it on my beaches. So we’re going to be moving that somewhere else, I’m sure.” A spokesman for the governor declined to confirm or deny the remarks. A spokesperson for the state’s gambling regulator, the Division of Gaming Enforcement, told The Daily Caller News Foundation that local officials were notified at least twice that the fireworks display was set for the island of Barnegat. “It is our understanding that there was a miscommunication on the timing of the display,” the official said. “Given that it was a family gathering, and a number of races at the TRAC, one can imagine the fireworks were well lit even at dusk.” Lawmakers and local officials in Barnegat said they were not told about the planned fireworks display on the island until a week before it happened. The official noted that it was unfortunate that the event took place on the holiday, however, said that the Division of Gaming Enforcement was informed twice, and that the agency did not feel that the violation of the regulation was a major issue. “Staff at the Division of Gaming Enforcement does not think it necessary to pull the plug on the
